BLACK GENOCIDE

In New York City, the capital of babylon, AIDS has been let to run unchecked. For six years it has devastated the gay male community, while the government looked smugly on with folded arms and gleeful smirks. And for six years AIDS has silently moved in the Afrikan-american and Puerto Rican communities, laying the groundwork for mass deaths in the next five years. The government of white amerikkka hid that knowledge while the disease took root.

Now, everyone knows that white people think that there are too many Black people in the world, certainly too many in the u.s. and on the streets of its headquarters city. Just look around you. Whites are driving Afrikan-americans into the streets and prisons, shrinking Black housing more every month by arson and gentrification. They are supposed to go away, leave, conveniently disappear. They won't go? Then they should die.

Whole blocks and neighborhoods are to be destroyed. City health commissioner dr. Stephen C. Joseph finally admitted on January 16, 1987, that the AIDS epidemic "will change everything about the city, its demography, the political and economic life of the city." It is believed that 500,000 people in NYC are already infected with AIDS. That's one out of every ten adults in the city. Long range studies done in Europe predict that 50-70% of those infected will die within eight years. Some scientists believe that 100% of those infected will die. And the majority will be young Afrikan-americans and Latins. Just who white people would love to get rid of. What a coincidence.

The NYC Afrikan-american community is the government's secret testing grounds, the death reservation, to observe the uncontrolled spread of AIDS. They wanted to secretly test what danger AIDS could be to "innocent" straights. So for six years the government has shielded AIDS, making sure that nothing interfered with its silent progress into the Afrikan-american reservation. And if a few hundred thousand (or more) young Afrikan-americans die "naturally", why the government thinks it's all the better.

This won't be the first time that the Afrikan-american community has been the testing grounds in perverted government "health" experiments. They did the same thing on a smaller scale in Macon County, Alabama in the infamous Tuskegee Syphilis Study, that they're doing now in New York. In that experiment 431 Afrikan-american men with syphilis were kept untreated without their knowledge from 1932 to 1972, so u.s. government doctors could see how they died. Of the 431 Afrikan-american men, 107 died from syphilis and 250 died of related illnesses. Only 74 survived. An unknown but large number of Black women and children were also victims over the 40 years. The government is still keeping its coverup going on this part. If it admitted to killing off not only Afrikan-american men, but also women and children, why then the question of genocide might come up. Their story is worth telling because this is the same white "health" bureaucracy running the AIDS epidemic today.

Like AIDS today, syphilis had become an epidemic in the Afrikan-american community by the 1930s. That was no problem for white doctors, who claimed that venereal disease was biologically natural for people of color—Afrikans in particular. Articles in white medical journals then tossed around labels like: "Negroes: A Syphilis-Soaked Race". It was known that most untreated syphilis patients died from the disease. But white doctors wondered if that only applied to Europeans. Afrikans, being so used to the disease, might need no treatment at all. That was insane, I know, but that's what white male science has always been like.

The ruling class wanted the syphilis problem cleared up only because the epidemic was interfering with their exploitation of the Afrikan-american community. U.S. army doctors had been forced to let more and more Afrikan-american men go because they were infected; as many as 20% of all Black draftees by 1940. So "health" authorities began pilot programs with free VD screening and medicine. But some white doctors argued that money could be saved by not treating Afrikan-americans.

The Tuskegee Study was done to test that theory on living, unsuspecting Afrikan-americans, to see how many would die. Macon County, Alabama, was chosen by the u.s. public health service because its population of 27,000 was mostly Afrikan-american (82%). They were sharecroppers and farm laborers who were isolated geographically, uneducated and under Klan domination. The Afrikan-american community there was "saturated" with syphilis, 39% of adults testing positive in a 1930 screening by the Julius Rosenwald foundation.

So in 1932 the Afrikan-american residents of Macon County were glad to hear that the federal government had come with a special free "health" program for them. At church meetings Afrikan-american doctors from the Tuskegee Institute, the famed Black school started by Booker T. Washington, told them that their cooperation with the government would wipe out venereal disease in the community.

Throughout back country (above) of Macon County, Ala., and in town of Tuskegee, recruitment drives to secure experiment subjects got underway in fall of 1932. The Depression and poverty in general encouraged recruits to accept free lunches and free burials.

1,782 Afrikan-american men over 25 were asked to take blood tests. Slightly over 400 of these men were found to be in the later stages of syphilis. These men were persuaded to take part in the study with the promise of free government doctors' examinations, medicines, free "hot meals" on exam days, and burial insurance. The idea was even encouraged that this was a status thing, a Black men's social club and burial lodge sponsored by the federal government.

But there was no health program, only the deception of something meant to look like one. The u.s. public health services' plan was to cut these Afrikan-american families off from medical care so that their deaths could be studied. There was only a killing program. In 1936 one of the white government officials wrote of his Black subjects:

"Such individuals seemed to offer an unusual opportunity to study the untreated syphilis patient from the beginning of the disease to the death of the infected person. An opportunity was offered to compare the syphilitic process uninfluenced by modern treatment, with the results attained when treatment has been given."

The government "health" plan required a major conspiracy, for the Afrikan-american families had to be kept unknowing and with no way to get medical care. Government doctors and nurses were careful never to tell the men that they would probably die without medical treatment. The men were only told that they had "bad blood". One man, Herman Shaw, remembers that all the government doctors would tell him was to slap him on the back and exclaim, "You are good for 100 years". Shaw was accidentally sent to a Birmingham hospital for treatment once, and had to be found and bused home the next morning to keep him from getting penicillin.

Each year the men got visits from the Black u.s. public "health" nurse, who dispensed free bottles of painkillers and worthless "spring tonic". The idea was to fool the families into thinking they were getting medicine. The conspiracy involved the entire "health" system. Names of the men were on a list given to all local doctors and hospitals. No one on the list could get treatment by secret order of the Alabama state dept. of "health". No one on the list could be told this. Catch-23.

This nazi-like experiment was being financed by a liberal white foundation in NYC, the Milbank Memorial Fund. Other u.s. public "health" service work in the Afrikan-american community was being financed by the Julius Rosenwald Foundation in Chicago. Both foundations were regarded as being "in the vanguard of the civil rights movement", and were very involved in Afrikan-american community affairs. Since most of the Tuskegee Institute's budget came from one source, the same Julius Rosenwald Foundation, they willingly cooperated in denying medical care to the Black families selected for death.

The experiment went on until 1972. In 1966 a young u.s. public "health" service doctor in San Francisco, hearing about the study from a co-worker, wrote to the director of the Center for Disease Control (CDC) in Atlanta. This is the elite federal communicable disease center, which was managing the Tuskegee Study and which, coincidentally, is in charge of the national AIDS program today. The young doctor warned his superiors:

"The Tuskegee study could be compared to the German medical experiments at Dachau and that public disclosure of such a scandal could jeopardize congressional funding..."

He was then flown to CDC headquarters in Atlanta for a top-level meeting, in which the usefulness of the study was defended by "health" officials. A proposal that any survivors be told the truth and given antibiotics was rejected. Since all the Afrikan-american survivors were expected to have serious heart damage, the doctors said, the shock of treatment might kill them. Besides, the CDC wanted to secretly continue their nazi experiment.

In 1972 the story finally came out, after 40 years, ending the secret experiment in public scandal. One part of the Tuskegee Study is still going strong, however, the coverup. A heavy-duty whiteout came down, in which a government-appointed panel (chaired by a Black college president) issued a report only mildly criticizing the lack of informed consent by the subjects. The statement by CDC assistant chief dr. Ralph J. Henderson that the experiment had "started out as a good thing" was echoed by the panel.

The government coverup centered on keeping Afrikan-american women and children invisible. CDC headquarters in Atlanta admitted that the 431 men had an average of 5 children each, 80% were married, and there were an unknown number of sex partners involved. You and i would think that there were many hundreds of Afrikan-american women and children also infected, many of the children congenitally infected at birth. Many of these children would never have lived to adulthood if untreated.

All sides on the investigating panel were quick on the draw to say that no Afrikan-american women and children had been infected. Replying to a setup question by Sen. Edward Kennedy, dr. Henry Simmons, deputy to then HEW Secretary Casper Weinberger (now Ronnie's Secretary of Defense), said that there had been no "hazard to those around the patients" because their later-stage syphilis was non-infectious.

Here the coverup showed itself in a thin lie. While the later stages of syphilis are mostly "latent", where the bacteria is silently destroying the nervous system, blood vessels, vital organs and bones, but is not infectious to others, at any time the disease can switch to the "active" phase and be very infectious. The Tuskegee Study knowingly condemned Afrikan-american women and children to death, as well as 357 adult men. Government doctors could not screen and inform and treat women and children without tipping off the primary male subjects that something was wrong.

In 1973 a CDC memo, not given out to the public, confessed: "the possibilities are that wives may have contracted the disease directly and that children may suffer from congenital conditions." The memo confidentially estimated the expense of medical treatment just for surviving children at up to $127 million. How many women died has never been made public (50 women were still being treated by government doctors in 1980), since the coverup is still running.

For 40 years, through Democratic and Republican administrations, the government had kept a conspiracy going to withhold medical treatment from Afrikan-americans so that the deadly progress of a disease could be studied by white male science, for the benefit of the empire. And this is what they have done with AIDS in the NYC Afrikan-american community, only this time on a far grander scale of death.

For six years the NYC dept. of "health" refused to carry out any of the recommendations of gay organizations, AIDS researchers, and public health specialists. ALL steps that might have headed off the epidemic in the Afrikan-american

Born Dying: AIDS' 2nd Generation

Life Is Short and Bleak for Children in Harlem Hospital

By Sandra G. Boodman
Washington Post Staff Writer

NEW YORK—Last July a drug addict, seven months pregnant, was admitted to Harlem Hospital Center in labor. Within hours she delivered a 1½-pound baby. The next day she checked out of the hospital, leaving behind a daughter she did not name.

Today that 9-month-old baby, whose weight hovers around 6½ pounds—lighter than many newborns—is dying of AIDS in the hospital she never left. Doctors say she got the disease from her mother, who returned only once for a visit.

The baby, who has spent her life encased in an oxygen tent, hooked up to a heart monitor, a nasal feeding tube and an intravenous antibiotic line, is a member of a fast-growing second generation of AIDS victims: infected babies, most of whom are born to drug-addicted parents who are dying of the disease.

As of March 16, the federal Centers for Disease Control re-reservation were vetoed by city "health" officials. Once again the government was pretending to have a "health" program, while being busy behind the scenes making sure that nothing interfered with the progress of disease among Afrikan-americans.

Step one for the government was to lull the victims, to give the Afrikan-american community a false picture of the disease. For six years the city "health" department refused to put out serious education about AIDS. Instead, publicity gimmicks such as the drive against gay bathhouses reinforced the image of AIDS as a "lifestyle" disease of gay white men. Yet in New York half of all AIDS victims are Afrikan-american and Latin, with the percentage increasing every year.

On a world basis the majority of AIDS deaths are among women, Afrikan women. In the most infected areas, such as around lake Victoria in Uganda, villages are devastated with survivors fleeing to other places and over half the people stricken. Is it impossible for this to happen here in the NY Afrikan-american reservation?

Step two for the city "health" plan has been to prevent AIDS screening, to deny Afrikan-americans knowledge of whether they carry the AIDS virus. At first, for six years, the "health" officials were upfront in opposing screening. This was done under the leadership of dr. David Spencer, former city "health" commissioner, who came here after being in charge of the Tuskegee Study coverup operation at CDC headquarters in Atlanta. Only last year deputy "health" commissioner dr. Stephen Schultz declared: "There is no value to testing any population except blood donors". Of course, they don't want straight whites or even, heavens forbid, the ruling class, to get AIDS through contaminated blood transfusions.

But the government doesn't want to interfere with their study of unknowing Afrikan-americans transmitting AIDS to other Afrikan-americans. The city even forbid tem: In a recent march in Georgia, hooded members of the Ku Klux Klan carried signs advocating racial separation that read, "Thank God for AIDS."

AIDS and Racism

■ Item: Belgium recently announced it is requiring some 1,500 Third World students, mostly Africans, to submit to a test for acquired immune deficiency syndrome or lose their scholarships.

In the face of a pending worldwide AIDS epidemic, governments and individuals are calling for action, and what was once a stone wall of denial among Africans and blacks has given way to a new determination to confront the problem.

But as much-needed education and medical campaigns are unveiled around the world to try to stop the spread of the disease, many thoughtful observers are worried that there are attempts to fuel racism by associating AIDS with blacks and Hispanics. These groups account for 40 percent of AIDS cases in the United States, according to statistics.

"Some individuals are using [AIDS' disproportionate impact on blacks] as a tool to destroy hard-earned civil rights," said Dr. Wayne Greaves of Howard University Hospital. "We know many Haitians who work as housekeepers and taxi drivers who have been discriminated against."

Furthermore, like any group in society that has historically been ostracized, the whole group can be affected by negative stereotyping.

"Over the years, blacks have been considered to be lazy, living off welfare and not taking care of their health," said Greaves. "AIDS is seen as almost an extension of this." According to people who think like this, blacks, just like homosexuals, are getting what they deserve.

Moreover, with widely circulated but unsubstantiated reports that the deadly virus originated in African countries and in Haiti, the circle was completed of the disease being seen as concentrated in groups not generally highly regarded in society.

According to World Health Organization estimates, at least 50,000 Africans have died of the disease and 2 million to 5 million are carriers of the virus. A November report from the U.S. Center for Disease Control said blacks and Hispanics account for 40 percent of AIDS cases in the United States and are far more likely to get the disease than white Americans.

THE WASHINGTON POST

anonymous testing (except for white gays who went to their private doctors), saying that Afrikan-americans and Latins who wanted AIDS virus screening had to go to a few unpublicized clinics, register as gay and/or drug addict (you had to pick one to get the test), and present proof of identity. Not too many lined up to do that.

Now that the epidemic is in sight (the World Health Organization is talking about 100 million victims worldwide) these same "health" officials are verbally acknowledging the need for community-based, easily available, anonymous AIDS education and testing.

The city opened one such AIDS center at the end of 1986, in the Chelsea area to serve the gay male community (which already has services they've organized on their own, against government opposition). The opening of the last four AIDS testing and education storefront sites in 1987, one each in Harlem, Bronx, Brooklyn, and Queens, is only a gesture. One storefront for every 500,000-1 million people. That's like having a ship with the promise of one lifeboat for every 1000 passengers. This kind of plan isn't a "health plan" but only a deception; the Afrikan-american community is being studied but not helped to live.

Deliberately withholding services for drug addicts was important, since that was the main vector of AIDS spread into the community. Some 90% of addicts who use needles share their scarce needles. The government has refused to fund enough drug abuse programs (to say nothing of what causes drug use). Half of all addicts in the city are now believed to have the AIDS virus. Most, or all will die. As will many of their sex partners, and these peoples' subsequent sex partners.

What can you do if you find out that, although you feel fine, you have the AIDS virus? Here's catch-24. Medical advice is that the more positive your general health the better your chance of not getting the disease. So doctors advise being in a good mood, to eat a nutritious diet, avoid drugs, smoking and alcohol, and get the right amounts of rest and exercise.

How you're supposed to do that on food stamps, or while coping with kids in a welfare hotel, or while there's no money in your pocket, is up to you. AIDS and the oppressed were tailor-made for each other.

What's really going on is Black genocide, that AIDS is being used as just one part of a larger white babylonian conspiracy. Mayor Koch, for instance, would obviously love to get rid of poor Afrikan-americans any way he can. He is emptying Harlem for yuppie condominiums. His dream is to get Afrikan-american homeless off Manhattan's expensive streets, make Black people just go away like the Indians, make them disappear everywhere from his apartheid real estate dreams. Is it a coincidence that his "health" dept. has done everything possible to spread AIDS among Afrikan-americans short of tying folks down and injecting them? Is it a coincidence that dr. David Sencer, who was CDC director and in charge of the Tuskegee coverup operation, was brought to NYC to oversee this city's AIDS non-program? Or that once again a government "health" program has been mainly concerned with denying Afrikan-americans knowledge and services?

And once again the invisibility of Afrikan-american women is at the center of the coverup. We should never lose sight of the fact that in central Afrika, where AIDS is already a full epidemic with an estimated million cases so far, three-quarters of all AIDS victims are women. Over 65,000 Afrikan women have already died of AIDS just as the Afrikan-american community was being fed the image of AIDS as a white gay male disease.

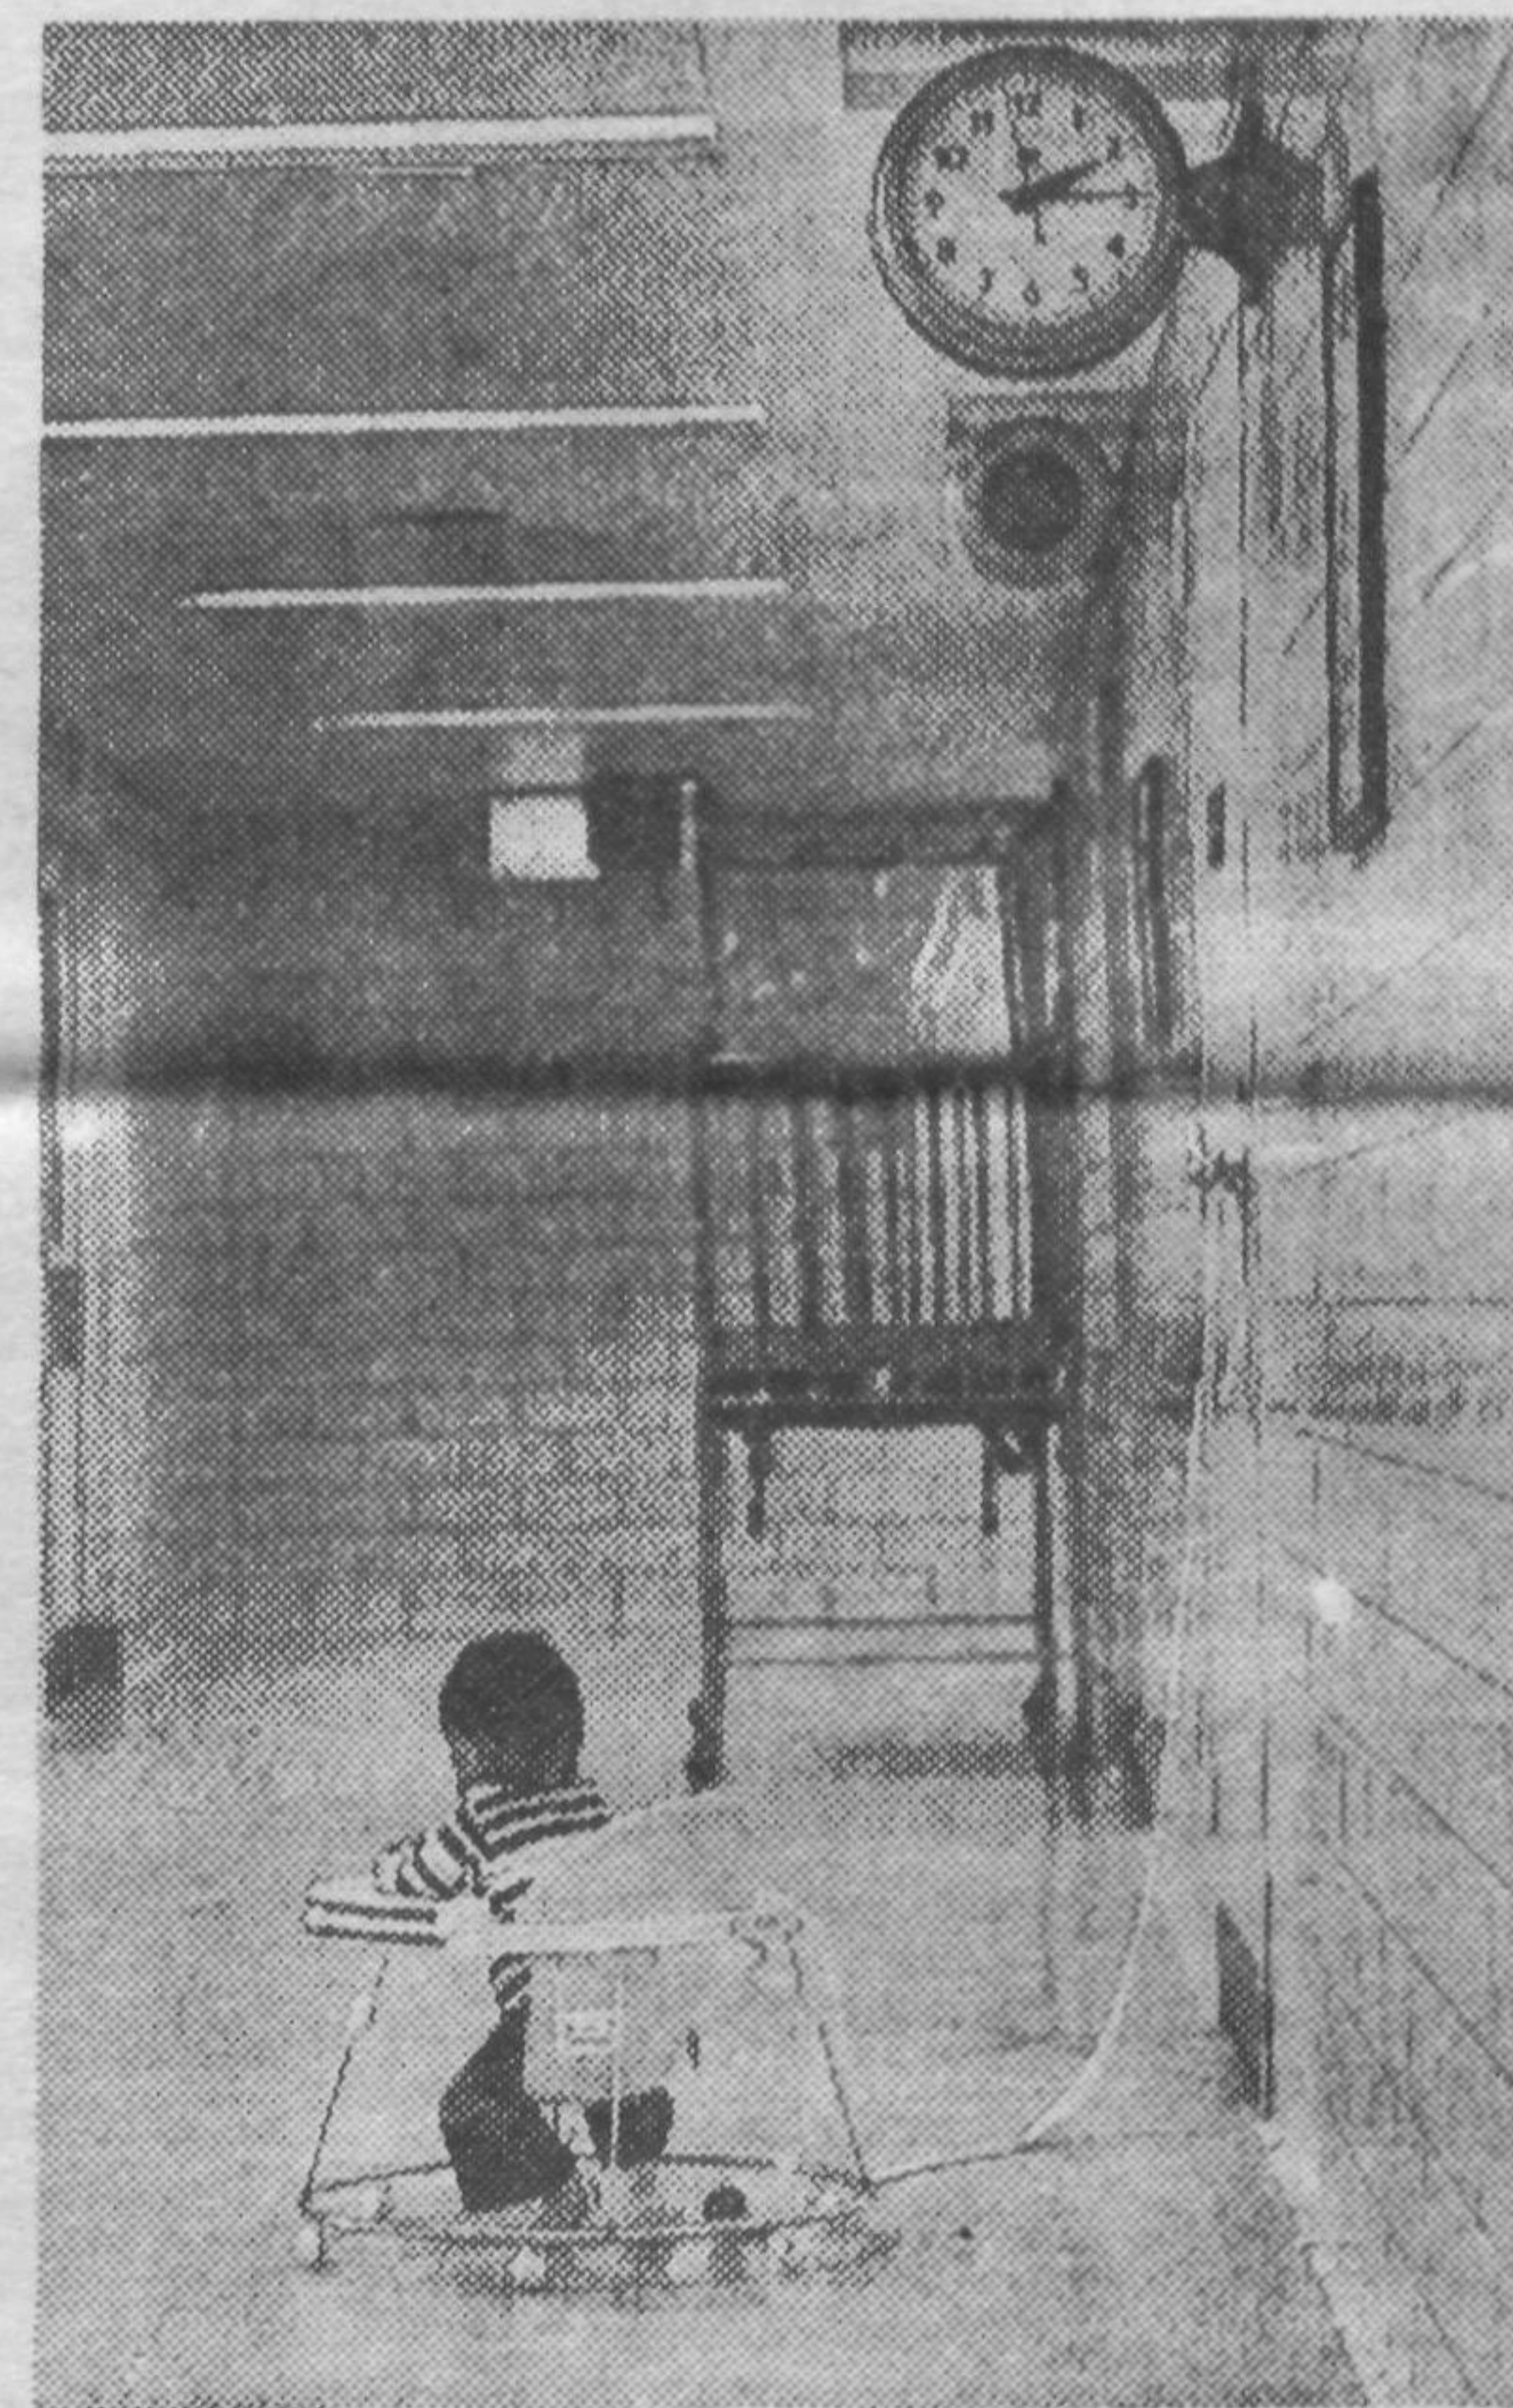

Dr. Sheldon Landesman, coordinator of the AIDS program at Kings County Hospital, warns: "It is not unreasonable to guess that there are at least 50,000 women of child-bearing age infected with the AIDS virus" in NYC. Most will die, along with their young children. 80% of these children are Afrikan-american and Latin.

The number of women with AIDS is rising, and researchers now admit that because women show a different pattern of symptoms (we tend not to get skin cancers but do tend to die quickly) we are often not diagnosed as AIDS cases. AIDS is already the leading cause of death in NYC for women ages 25 to 29, and the second leading cause in women ages 30-34. On a national basis 51% of women with AIDS are Afrikan-american and 22% are Latinas. Relatively few white middle-class women are affected, and very few white middle-class lesbians. This has led many white feminists to consider AIDS a "boys" problem. As if sisterhood is spelled W-H-I-T-E. The epidemic AIDS deaths of thousands of women is genocide. Not an act of God, but an act of the ruling class, an act of white patriarchy.

Girl found dead near where 2nd was assaulted

Two boys walking behind a home in northeastern Anne Arundel County found the body of a young girl yesterday less than an hour after a man assaulted another girl inside the house, county police reported.

Police were unsure last night whether the discovery of the body and the assault were related.

At 4:50 p.m., two boys walking about 100 yards behind the Cutler Harbour house found the body of a girl wrapped in a blanket and thrown into a storm drain, police said.

The girl appeared to be between 12 and 14 years old, according to police.

WAR AGAINST WOMEN

"war, n. 1. open armed conflict between nations or states... 3. any state of violent opposition or contest; act of opposition; inimical act or action; hostility; strife; as, the war between the sexes." Webster's New Twentieth Century Dictionary

Where is our memorial? There is a memorial in Washington, D.C. for the 50,000 u.s. soldiers who died invading Vietnam. But nowhere in this land or any other is there a memorial, no matter how small, to the much greater numbers of women who have been killed in men's war against women.

We are at war, and male patriarchal society is an enemy territory for us in which we are terrorized, subverted, beaten, raped, and murdered. Now women's political awakening, our growing resistance, has kicked men's war against us into a new stage. The government says that 4,000 women are murdered each year in the u.s., 30% by husbands and boyfriends and almost 100% by men. This is not the whole story.

WNBC's Rolanda Watts was told by NY emergency room nurses that 20% of women suicides were because they were victims of repeated battering. A study at Rutgers University found that 50% of African-american women suicides followed battering, 50% of alcoholism in women was linked to battering, and that battering by men is the leading single cause of injuries to women (over car accidents, work injuries, muggings).

There are the tens of thousands of missing women and children, some of whose bones are found by hikers in remote areas. Aren't they the real M.I.A.s? Not men invading Southeast Asia, but women casualties in the war right here. A missing woman isn't worth a second thought in America. Aren't you and I conditioned not to think about them, also? There is mass murder going on, silently.

Maybe that's why we don't have our own army, because we've been conditioned by the patriarchy not to see this society as a war against women. We don't see that we mourn our sons but not our daughters. And where is our army, our nation, our culture?

Men tell us there's no war, that it's only a matter of individual crimes or only family problems or only psychological problems. 1.8 million women are battered each year in the u.s. according to the latest survey. At Boston City Hospital 70% of physical assault victims are women "attacked in their homes, usually by a husband or lover". No one knows how many women are raped each year, although the usual figure quoted is that one out of every seven women will be raped in her lifetime. This, too, is an underestimation.

A 1986 study of "date rape" interviewed 6,000 women students on 32 college campuses:  $\frac{1}{4}$  had been victims of rape and attempted rape since age 14; 84% knew their attacker. One Philadelphia student, "Renee", had been raped by her professor. He was arrested on her complaint and then arrested again for raping another student, and walked on both.

... death called suspicious

Skeleton Identified as Va. Woman Missing a Year

By Patricia Davis
Washington Post Staff Writer

Fairfax County police said yesterday that the human bones discovered in a park this week are those of 19-year-old Cynthia A. Barrows, who was reported missing more than a year ago.

The cause of death has not been determined, said police spokesman Warren Carmichael, but it has been labeled suspicious. The medical examiner identified the bones with the aid of Barrows' dental records and personal effects found in the park.

Barrows' disappearance was reported by her mother, Joanne Bothwell, on Feb. 19, 1986. When she was told of the identification, "she was very relieved that her long wait was over," Carmichael said.

Bothwell could not be reached for comment yesterday. Her daughter was last seen at a 7-Eleven at the Bradlick Shopping Center, about six miles from the park. Barrows' light green Volkswagen Rabbit, with her purse and glasses inside, was parked and locked outside the convenience store, Carmichael said.

Earlier that evening, Barrows, a part-time waitress, had gone with a group to a restaurant in Annandale and then to a girlfriend's house to play Trivial Pursuit, police said. They said Barrows left her friend's house at 4 a.m. with two male friends, drove her car to the store and entered a van with one of the men.

Carmichael said the man told police he does not know what happened to Barrows, and that he drove to his parents' house and slept in the van.

The bones and personal effects were discovered Tuesday evening scattered along a path in Beulah Park, in the southern part of the county, by a man walking home from work, police said.

Male violence against children has become such an epidemic that it's a national scandal or a national sport. A 1985 Los Angeles Times survey estimated that somewhere between 10 million and 17 million u.s. men were sexually abusing children. Is that all? At one California mental health clinic 44% of the women patients had been attacked as children. Killing those men should be our No. 1 mental health program.

This cannot be an individual problem; it's the male structure of society. White feminists still want the police and courts to protect us; we beg and plead for men to be more "sensitive" to our oppression. What illusions the oppressed wear over their eyes. Aren't the police system and the courts and laws only there to protect the ruling class from those that they oppress? Who protected the 3-year old daughter of Pelham, N.H. Police Chief William Collis, when he raped her? A male judge dismissed the charges, despite or because of the testimony of the mother and women social workers and child-abuse experts.

And do you know why police and fbi can't identify those serial murderers of Afrikan-american women and children? Answer this: who can always get women into his car and return to the scene time and again without being a suspect? The murderers and rapists and batterers and police and judges and bureaucrats are the same people, not different people.

■ University of New Hampshire students were confronted on campus by three male effigies hanging next to a banner that proclaimed "Beware Boys, Rape Will Not Be Tolerated," apparently triggered by a dormitory rape late last month.

Now the war has been kicked into a whole new stage. Violence against women has always been here, of course, ever since the first class society was formed. The oppressors need violence to terrorize and hold down the oppressed. That's what lynching Afrikan-americans was all about. Is all about. White women used to be "protected" by being the property of only one man, by living restricted lives by male permission of father or husband. Only one man at a time had the right to beat or rape or kill us. That's changed.

Since the 1960s social jailbreak women have moved towards more and more personal independence from men; leaving the narrow household prison, leaving monogamy, being monetarily self-supporting, moving about the country at our own decision, some leaving heterosexuality behind. Hey, now we're fair game for any man. Men figure we deserve it, bitches only trying to liberate ourselves. And for the most part they figure they can get away with it. That's what courts and police are there for.

The war against women is at a turning point. Because of our resistance against male attacks, our awakening consciousness, the ruling class has slammed new strategy into play. A campaign is running to maneuver us around while propagandizing men for new offensives. It's not only Hustler and Penthouse and "Deep Throat" now. The new propaganda offensive is being led by NBC, CBS, ABC, Time magazine, and other mainstream media. Farah Fawcett has gone from being one of "Charlie's Angels" to being the gritty rape victim who overpowers and ties up her attacker. Incest, rape, child prostitution, and battering are exploited for highly-promoted TV specials and magazine cover stories.

This new "sensivity" is very popular with men. They love hearing every detail about raping children, kidnapping women right off the streets, and how easy it is to get away with it all. They're getting off on all this respectable pornography under a "socially aware" brown wrapper. This is the way the TV networks and the mainstream media can get in on the porn profits while pretending that the system is gearing up to protect women from male violence.

Porn publications have caught on, too, especially since they're getting criticism from the Right-wing. The January issue of Hustler has a main story that shows how it works: "A COP REVEALS: SHOCKING SEX CRIMES". The article gives its male readers graphic accounts of rapes and murders, including one story of men who got away with raping, torturing, and disemboweling a 13 year-old woman-child while they filmed the action. Details are given so that the sick readers don't miss a thing. That's what they need to get it up. This is supposed to be "socially aware" education, but only a fool wouldn't know what it really is.

2 men are sought in Pa. woman's disappearance

Police hunt man who poses as officer to search girls

Howard County police are looking for a man who has been posing as a store detective or police officer at Columbia shopping centers over the last 18 months as a ruse to search girls.

Sgt. Angus J. Park, a police spokesman, said yesterday that police detectives investigating the cases believe that more of these incidents have occurred, but that some victims have either been too embarrassed to report them, or dismissed the incidents.

Two men are being sought in the disappearance and possible murder of a Pennsylvania woman whose burned-out car was found abandoned in a snow-covered cornfield in Cecil County Feb. 23, State Police say.

In addition, a reward of up to $20,000 is being offered for information on the whereabouts of Sheree Magaro or the arrests of the suspects. The reward is being offered by a group calling itself Friends of Sheree Magaro.

Magaro, 29, who lived with her young son in the Wil-Lo Farm trailer park near Harrisburg, was last seen about 10 p.m. Feb. 22 by her boyfriend when she left his Kennedyville, Kent County, home alone for the return trip to Harrisburg.

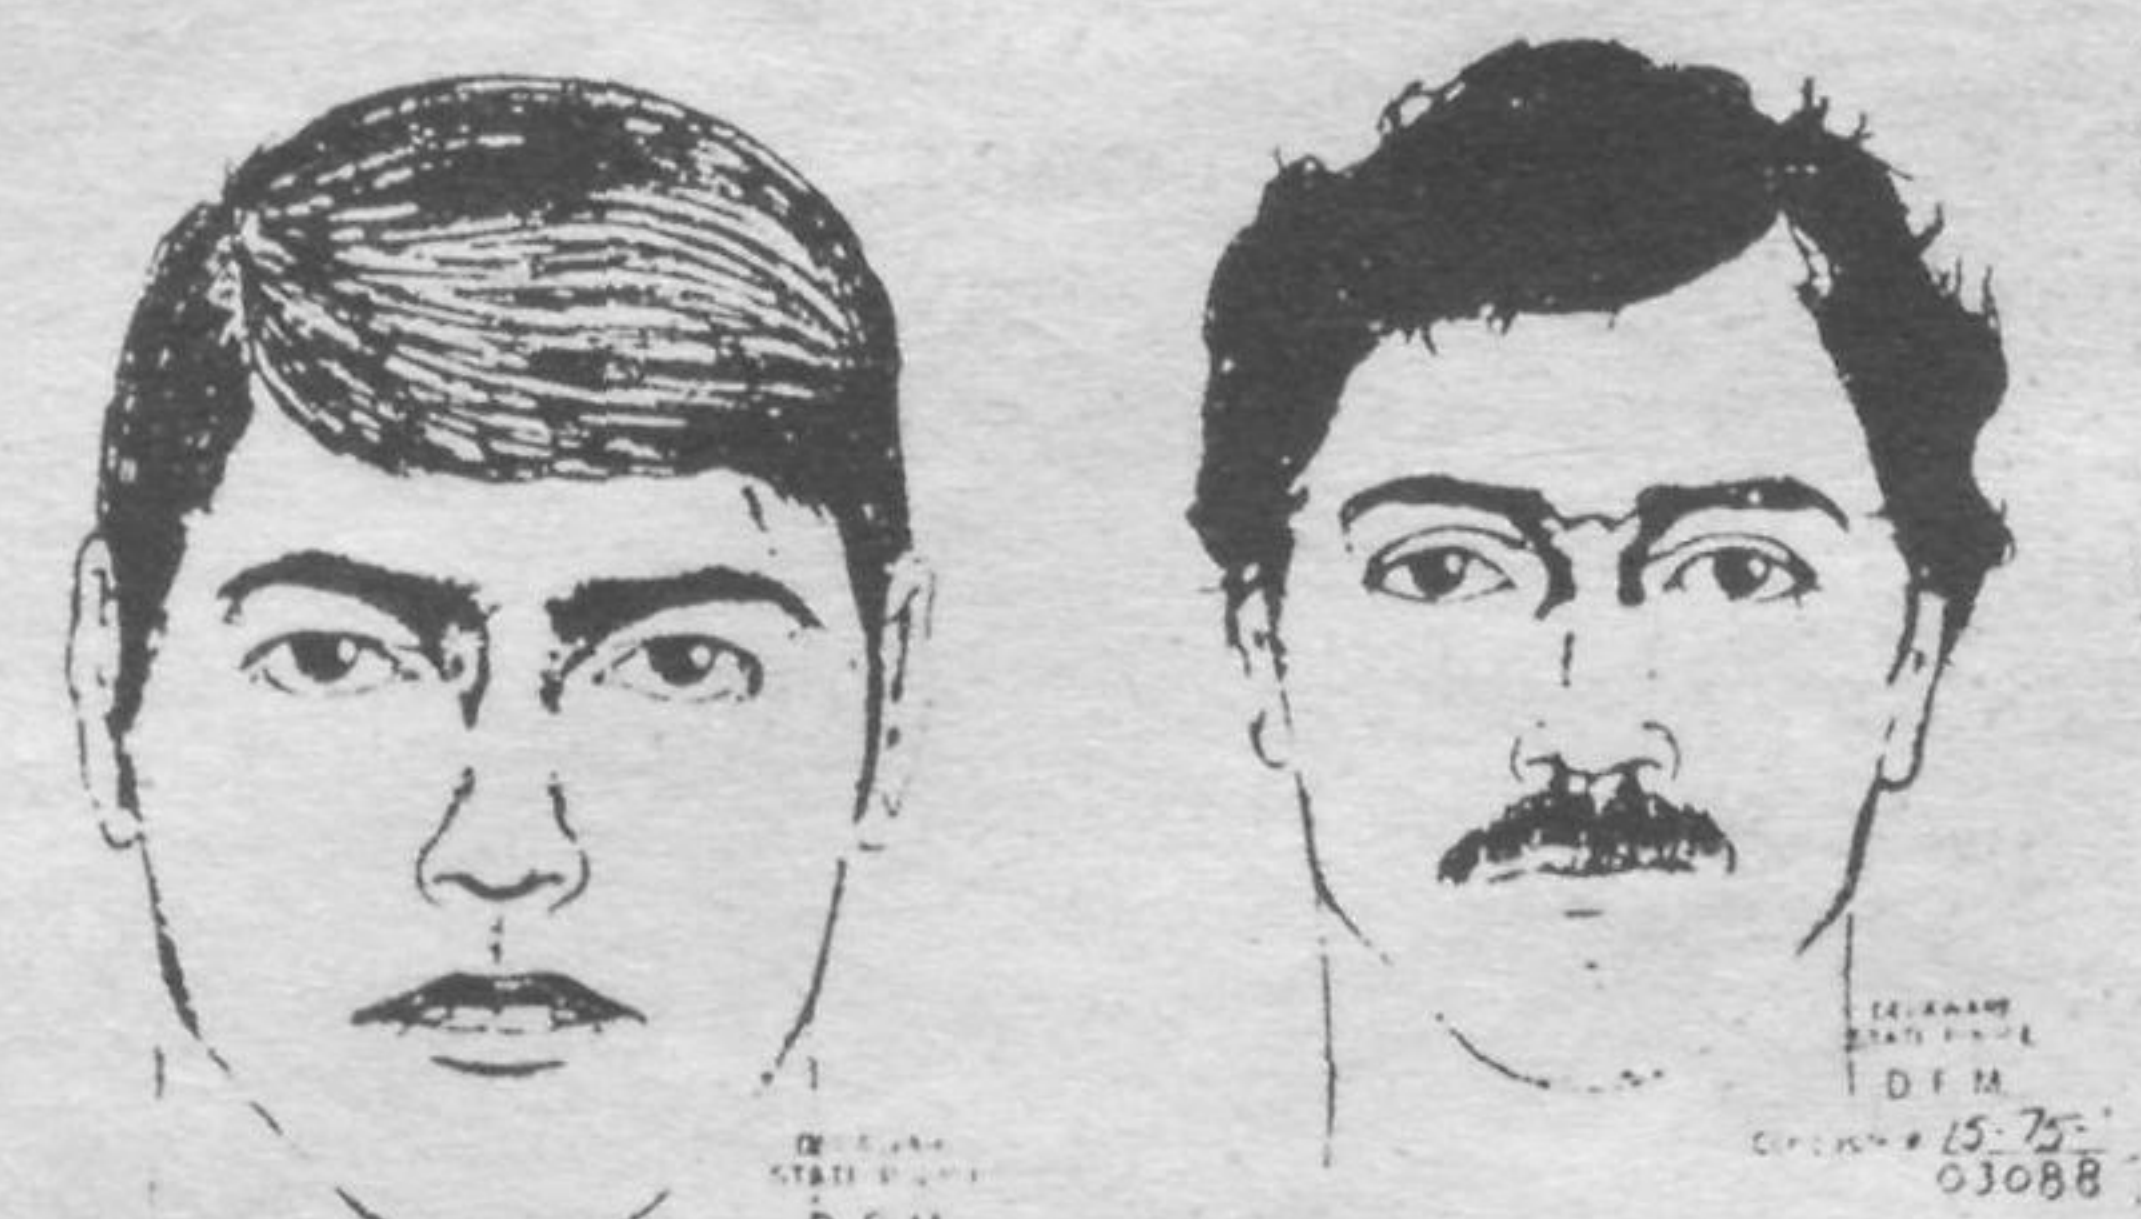

a cornfield off Md. 213 in the Hacks Point section. Inside the car, police found human blood, body tissue and hair.

Police said that on the morning Magaro's car was found a man attempted to use the woman's credit card at a Sears store in Bel Air. When the clerk attempted to make a routine credit check, police said, the man walked out of the store.

That night, the clerk heard about Magaro's disappearance and notified store officials, who called the police the next day.

The man seen at the Sears store has a dark complexion and in his 20s, about 5-feet-9 inches, 160 pounds, with short black hair, blue-green eyes and a smooth, clean face.

Also being sought for questioning in the case is a man seen in the Hacks Point area the night Magaro's car was found.

Police sketches of two suspects in the Sheree Magaro case.

Police said the car had been set afire in an effort to destroy evidence.

Evidence found in the car was taken from the men's department.

The day after the car was found, an off-duty state Department of Natural Resources policeman found a bloodstained man's plaid shirt near the Bohemia River bridge. Divers were sent into the river but no trace of the woman was found.

Prince George's County police begin two-hour search through heavy underbrush in Suitland. No additional bodies were found in the operation yesterday.

Police Still Digging for Leads in Suitland Slayings

By Keith Harriston
Washington Post Staff Writer

Prince George's County police investigators returned yesterday to a wooded area near Suitland Road where the bodies of five young black women were found almost three months ago, checking to make sure that the department's increased patrols had prevented other bodies from being dumped there.

"We wanted to reassure ourselves that there were no other bodies left there since the last search in the early part of January," said Robert Law, a county police spokesman. "And we wanted to assure the community of the same thing."

After two hours of picking through the thick underbrush, the 50 county and mounted Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission police left the scene near the Bradbury Recreation Center, satisfied that they had not found a sixth body, but no closer to solving the multiple slayings.

Despite the thousands of hours spent in the most intensive county police investigation in the past 15 years, investigators said yesterday they are no closer to an arrest than they were when the bodies were discovered.

Soon after finding the fourth and fifth bodies on Jan. 13, police set up a command post at their Forestville headquarters for a task force of 25 detectives assembled from the department's homicide, sexual assault, domestic violence and district investigators' squads.

They worked 16-hour days, interviewed hundreds of friends, relatives and neighbors of the victims, but turned up no leads that proved fruitful.

"Homicide investigators are feeling a kind of frustration in their inability to uncover that one bit of information, that one clue that would lead them to the identity of the suspect or suspects in these cases," said Cpl. Bruce Gentile, a county police spokesman.

Ten weeks after the last body was found, with fewer calls to take and fewer leads to pursue, the number of investigators assigned to the case full time has been cut by about half.

The 16-hour days ended several weeks ago, when Police Chief Michael J. Flaherty cut back on overtime throughout the department, including the homicide unit.

"We are not saying that we are at a dead end," said Maj. James Ross, head of the Criminal Investigations Division. "We are still very vigorously pursuing leads."

But Ross and other officers concede that as time passes, the leads and tips come farther apart and the

The ruling class is also trying to mess with our minds. By terrorizing us with all these accounts of women as helpless victims. They want us to panic, if not for ourselves for our children, and see ourselves only as victims. So that we can be herded back to the nuclear family.

They want us to run to white men for protection, as husbands or as cops. Whiteout of minds is an essential element in men's counter-attack against women's liberation. They want us to reach for whiteness as our only protection—back the police, take refuge in "safe" white condos or white suburbs where we lock ourselves in with the white men who attack us, help "our" men drive Black people out (lynch mobs are just the working man's gentrification), although over 90% of rapes and violent attacks on white women are done by white men. Afrikan-american women are terrorized by Afrikan-american men while the entire euroamerikkkan nation (women and men) get off on their brutalization.

Whiteout also means the ruling class doesn't publicize women's resistance, whites it out so that we don't see how much women are starting to fight back, so we don't see what our anger and our strength really are. Case in point: when model Maria Hanson got her face

Search for Body Parts

■ CEDAR GROVE, Ind.—Search teams failed to find any additional body parts in a rural section of Franklin County where two legs, clothed in blue jeans and women's suede boots, were found over the weekend.

They were found in a wooded area near U.S. 52, adjacent to the Old Cedar Grove Baptist Church, by people rehearsing for a wedding.

STABBING DEATH

Police seek identity of woman with tattoo

Baltimore police were trying yesterday to identify a woman found in the morning stabbed to death near a marina in the 1200 block of South Lakewood Avenue.

Dennis S. Hill, a police spokesman, said the woman had been stabbed numerous times in the upper torso.

She was described by police as white, in her late 20s, about 5 feet 5 inches tall and weighing 130 pounds. They said she had a rose tattoo on her left breast.

Police said they had no suspect and were uncertain of a motive.

slashed up by men with razor blades it was front page news day after day. Helpless white beauty ruined by low-lives.

In comparison, on September 30, 1986 you might, just might, have noticed a two-inch high bit in the Daily News, back on page 48. That was about how a 23 year-old woman ingenuously killed a would-be rapist. She and a woman friend were relaxing at the Four Corners Recreational Area, a state park outside Nashville, Tenn. Two men attacked them. One of the men chased her companion, who outdistanced him racing through the forest.

The other rapist, 46 year-old Leceil Sawyer, was outdistanced by the woman as she leapt into her car and slammed the door. He got his arm through the window as she rolled it up, and kept trying to reach her. With an appropriate sense of tactics she simply drove off at warp ten. Flooring the accelerator she swerved over the yellow line and side-swiped the would-be rapist to death against an oncoming car. Every woman i spoke to about it said it was a gross but great story ("happy ending" was one smiling comment. "Rapist-paste" was another). But it wasn't on TV; it was buried in the back pages or cut out. Our successful resistance isn't a good story to them. But we must never forget that every day thousands of women are resisting, fighting back.

The other thing the ruling class wants is to hold our resistance at an individual level, scattered, unorganized. Each woman should

Boys Club Director Faces Sex Charges

By Ellis Henican

In many respects, John German was very good to the boys he is now accused of molesting.

Listen to what two of them had to say just before Christmas in 1985, when German, executive director of the Flushing Boys Club in Queens, was named Rotary Club Man of the Year:

"John is like a father to me, 'cause I don't have one. Without him, I wouldn't be as smart as I am now. He puts a lot of effort into all he does for me. It's great to have a friend like John."

That comes from a gap-toothed youngster from Bushwick, Brooklyn, one of German's "little brothers."

German pleaded guilty last month in federal court to taking the boy, now 15, on a Mexican holiday "for an illegal sexual purpose." He was indicted last Wednesday on related state charges.

Here's what another of German's "little brothers" said back in 1985. German met him at the Boys Club in J. The two boys are among his accusers. They claim that on dozens of occasions, German convinced them to join him in a plethora of sexual acts. "He seems genuinely to have enjoyed the company of children," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Valerie Caproni, who was assigned to prosecute German on related federal charges. "The boys mo-figure out how to protect herself alone (get a smaller husband, move to antarctica, get an "i got AIDS" tattoo) against any possible attacks from any number of larger men at any time. That's a ninja-superfem type trickbag, designed to make most of us feel helpless and inadequate. Women can never be safe in this society. Its the system that's the problem.

We need a political army to take back the night 365 nights a year--not just one. Self-defense is not the answer. No one tells the south afrikans that they should handle apartheid by studying karate. Martial arts as a program can never free us, although it has its uses. i'm a 50 year-old woman, and even though i do a physical job and am used to taking care of myself on the street, i'm never going to beat up a young, fast man. The self-defense thing isolates us. A political army makes use of every woman's ability, young and old alike. We need to depend on ourselves in a new way.

There are countless places to start. We need a national registry of missing women--our MIAs. Women don't want to face it but this is a mass problem. Without expecting it our MIAs flash through our awareness at odd moments. This fall i was reading a travel article about day hikes in California's Los Padres National Forest. Matter-of-factly the male author notes that at the edge of the trail into the wilderness:

"...a notice board is posted with desultory signs and messages. There is a picnic table, a water tank, and a ranger's tiny mobile home. There is no sign of a ranger. We park and walk to the notice board to ascertain our next move. A poster, long faded, its edges curling: MISSING. HAVE YOU SEEN THIS WOMAN? A girl's face stares out at us, smiling. She was a botany student, last seen a year ago..."

We are so CONDITIONED that we applaud the Mothers of the Plaza de Mayo, the Argentine women who wouldn't let the military junta cover up the "disappeared" youths killed by death squads--but we forget that this is us. We forget our own "disappeared", the thousands of our sisters abducted and killed by male death squads. Our "disappeared" are unidentified Jane Does forgotten in city morgues, unidentified remains found in parks and wilderness areas. Where are our Sisters of the Plaza?

AMERICA, AMERIKA, AMERIKKKA

The original americas didn't even have that name. They had Indian names and were made up of one hundred million people in many nations and tribes. They didn't have T.V. and Maxi series. There was not a he-ro chief played by Kris Kristofferson, with the anglo-saxon name of Devin Milford. There were leaders with names like Tecumseh, among others.

The indigenous peoples were invaded by europeans from across the seas looking for land to steal and people to enslave. I think by butchers with names like Milford and maybe Kristofferson, not Russian names like "Andrei Denisov". No one has yet portrayed the Indian sisters in these native societies as screwing their way up the social ladder or jumping like greedy frogs into the beds of the invaders.

In A.B.C.'s "Amerika" the invaders are themselves invaded from Russia. For some unexplained reason this invasion is, unlike the first, a major social tragedy which must be rectified. How this invasion was accomplished is also not explained. At any rate the blame is placed where it must belong. At one point, he-ro Milford, in explaining why his country got so weak, says "Amerikans have allowed themselves to become immobilized by their own selfish concerns." These bad concerns, Milford goes on, include "minority" issues (spelled B-L-A-C-K) and "women against men". Black rebellion and Women's Liberation lead to the inner collapse of Amerika. Sounds almost too good to be true. It is.

We need a national campaign for women MIA-POWs--the real missing in action. For all these sisters fallen due to men's war against us. And surely we must "fight like hell, for the living", to celebrate and defend our POWs. Our prisoners who are imprisoned because they killed an oppressor (which is no crime to us) or because they decided to do revolutionary violence against this wretched system.

To have an amazon army we have to have amazon honesty. We have to fight for this honesty. Even at its height the women's movement never raised this question of the war

Ten years after the Russian invasion Devin Milford, a Kennedy-type presidential candidate, comes home from a six year bit in a commie prison camp to lead a rebellion. Of course, all he sees around him are the wimpish he-ros and half witted sluts. Devin Milford's evil ex-wife Marion (played by Wendy Hughes) screwed her way up the Russian ranks til she struck it rich with an equally evil Russian general. Milford's sister Aletha (Christine Lahti) is an alcoholic slut doing the bidding of a sadistic East German. Then there is the usual dumb blond actress Kimberly Ballard (played by Mariel Hemingway). mistress of suave KGB Colonel Andrei Denisov.

I guess i am supposed to get riled up at this obvious right-wing degrading portrait of amerikkkan women. But i can't quite get to it. What i mostly feel is, what's new? Aren't we supposed to go to bed with the winner? Isn't that what we are trained for? If you are a woman in amerikkka and you want power--marry it. If you want the goodies of privilege put yourself in one grotesque posture or another. How are the fictional fems in "Amerika" that different than say, against women in a political way, and never had a program to deal with it. Take Back The Night isn't a program, it's a once-a-year slogan by women who don't intend to do it. Women still want to run to men, still mourn their sons but not their daughters.

We have to build in the cracks and crevices for now. We're not ready for a guerrilla army, although it's coming. Amerikkka still looks normal but everyone knows it isn't, though its still coasting downhill on all its wealth. This empire is falling apart. Lots of people are beginning to think beyond amerikkka, to leave it in their minds. People don't pay taxes or go to the police or obey any laws--and that's more and more people--they're starting to leave amerikkka. That's true for some right-wing men as well as revolutionary women. Either go with "our" men into trying to hold onto the past, or leave the white patriarchy and go with the circle of women. i believe that women today can begin to build something different, something the world has never seen before but that we've always ached for. Think about leaving amerikkka behind.

Nancy or Geraldine? Putting out for a KGB colonel is no different than making it with a sleaze landlord like John Zaccaro or Donald Trump or any one of the infinite Kennedys. And as long as we don't have our own woman land and woman culture we will always sleep with the occupiers. Always have; thats what the euro-amerikkkan family is all about.

ABC filmed its maxi series in a city called Chicago and a rural Nebraska town named Tecumseh. Indian names. Rivers, cities, counties, mountains, have Indian names all over amerikkka. We know Tecumseh was a Shawnee leader who tried to unite all the Indian nations to kick out the white invaders, and who allied with the British in taking Detroit, but we aren't sure what Chicago means. It was the Indian name in use when the white settlers arrived and they forgot to get it straight with the Indians before they killed them all.

White european men are the occupiers, the foreign invaders of amerikkka. I mean the ones here now who fear invasion and occupation. Women, white euro-amerikkkan women, who defend "my Man" are already sleeping with the occupiers. It is noteworthy that the most serious competition for ratings that ABC's "Amerika" had was with that all-time amerikkkan rating getter the "Miss America" contest. Dad was mentally fondling women in the den while mom was mentally choosing generals in the living room.

"Amerika" is only amerikkka in a mirror.
